Republican Caucuses.

The Republican voters of Bangor are hereby invited to meet at

CITY HALL,
On Thursday Ev'g, March 6, 1890,
At 7.30 o'clock,
To nominate a Candidate for Mayor.

Ward Caucuses.

They are also invited to meet at the polling places of the various wards on Friday evening, March 7th, at 7.30 o'clock, to nominate candidates for Aldermen, Councilmen and Ward officers, to be voted for at the Municipal election, March 10th, 1890; also to elect a member of the Republican City Committee to serve for one year for each ward.

For Order of the Republican City Committee.
M. S. BRASE, Chairman.
J. W. HONIGAN, Secretary.

Bangor, Feb. 22, 1890.

The Democratic City Committee blossoms out with a new chairman. By the way when was this committee elected?

The National League of Republican Clubs is in session in Tennessee. There are six hundred delegates in attendance.

The Republican Mayor was elected in Waterville by a slightly increased majority, but the City Council remains Democratic.

Both branches of the Iowa Legislature voted for a United States Senator yesterday. Senator Allison had a majority in both branches.

The Board of Aldermen will be in session during the remainder of the week to revise the voting lists. Make sure that your name is properly recorded.

The Democrats are just now in love with Lewiston. It was a narrow margin on the Mayor vote, but with the tide running against them small favors are thankfully received.

In Philadelphia four thousand "speak easies," or unlicensed rum shops are in full operation. Pennsylvania has a high license law, but instead of affording effective restriction of the saloons it is violated on an extensive scale by the men who are opposed to any or all law calculated to prevent them from selling liquors.

Chairman Bass, of the Democratic City Committee, has issued a call for the Democratic caucus this evening to nominate a candidate for Mayor. The call invites the Democrats and others who believe in the right of every community to manage its own local affairs to participate in the caucus. Whose affairs would they manage if not their own?

Providence has a new Republican weekly that will grow into a daily, if it is cordially sustained. The Providence Republicans certainly ought to encourage the enterprise and thus send the Journal to the Democrats for its support. It has been masquerading as an independent sheet for some years, but its rightful position is in the Democratic ranks.

In view of the recent conflict in the House to establish the right of majority rule, the abstract of Speaker Reed's article in the North American Review, published on another page this morning, will be read with deep interest. The subject matter is treated with that clearness and force noticeable in all of Mr. Reed's communications and completely sustains the Republican position.

What a remarkably busy man the editor of the rum organ must be. For some time past, if he can be believed, he has been presiding over Republican indignation meetings in his office, and now he is receiving delegations from the Third Party who are making him a repository for alleged schemes which the wicked Republicans are trying to consummate. It would indeed be interesting to know some of those "well posted Third Party men" who are on such intimate terms with the rum organ. The fact is the organ is overdoing the thing. It has performed this same act in so many campaigns that the people only laugh at it now when it trots out one of those "we are reliably informed" secrets.

The Boston Post, commenting upon a letter written by Commissioner Roosevelt to Congressman Andrew, says:

> There is an undertone of suppressed indignation in this letter which has been noticed in other communications from the same source. Mr. Roosevelt evidently feels keenly the position in which he, an honest reformer, is placed, when representing a reform which the President and Congress agree to combine to crippple.

If Mr. Roosevelt is writing letters to Democratic members acceptable for an "undertone of suppressed indignation" that reflects upon the Administration and Congress, the President better reform his Civil Service Commission. When Mr. Roosevelt's indignation reaches that point where it can't find sufficient outlet in letters to Democratic Congressmen it may possibly occur to him that there is no law to compel him to remain in an uncongenial position.

A despatch from Montana says: The time of the first session of the Legislature of Montana having expired by limitation that body has adjourned as provided by the Constitution. Not a law was enacted nor an appropriation passed—the first instance of the kind in American history, due in this case to Democratic obstructionists, so our Territorial laws will have to do for the present. The Territory of Montana has been pretty regularly Democratic, the left wing of Price's army being relegated to the rear a year ago, forever it is hoped, by the election of a Republican Delegate, now Congressman Carter. During the recent campaign the old Democratic bosses had prestige, experience, organization and money. Before election day the promise of a season's work at large wages induced Scandinavian lumbermen known to be Republicans, no others being employed, to go into remote districts, while in Silver Bow County, at the polling place over which there has been so much dispute, a large number of Italian laborers were naturalized, but not in legal form, and herded to the ballot box, and this vote gave the Democratic Legislature a small majority. The Republicans contested the election and rival Legislatures resulted, each calling the other "rump." The State Supreme Court decided as to the legality of the Republican Senate, and the law was invoked to compel the attendance of the Democratic Senators in the regularly organized body, but they foolishly absconded from the State, admitting by flight the weakness of their position. This was the last of a series of weak fiascos which must result at parting at most any hope of future Democratic success in Montana.

Democratic Municipal Governments.

The Tariff in Iowa.

Gov. Boies, of Iowa, who stands by the Democratic creed, free rum and free trade, is just now receiving considerable attention at the hands of the press. We have already referred to his singular comments upon prohibition, and the Chicago Inter-Ocean punctures his free trade views as follows: Except as an indication that the Democrats of Iowa intend to revive General Hancock's definition of the tariff as "a local issue," that part of Governor Boies' message which treats of National revenue is not worth considering. When a man has lived into the year 1890 and has learned no more of the principles of political economy than this he also is hopeless:

> If by reason of this tariff, which increases the cost of imported goods, home manufacturers are enabled to exact a like price for like products on which no duty is paid, it is plain we pay in the increase price of these goods, not a tax for public use, but a contribution to the manufacturer, which he appropriates to his own use.

The shirt which the Governor wore while he spoke, the shoes on his feet, the coat on his back, the gloves which he laid in his hat when he entered the Senate chamber, the very watch in his pocket, one and all, were witnesses against him. His watch, if of American make, as the watch of an American Governor should be, was both cheaper and better than the watch produced in any other country. His shoes, unless needlessly imported from Paris in a riotous spirit of luxury, were bought at a cost representing one day's labor by an American skilled workman; the same shoes bought in England would represent the cost of two day's labor, three in Germany, five in Spain.

His shirt, unless of needless, imported linen, cost but very little more per yard than the tariff duty levied upon imported goods. His coat, in as it should have been, of elegant and honest American manufacture, was bought as cheaply as any London tailor would charge for a like article. The rails to be laid on those new railways of which he spoke will be of American manufacture, and will be bought as cheaply in Chicago as any English made rails can be bought in London. When the Governor of an American State made the rashly false assertion that the cost of duty upon imports was added to the price of American made articles of like kind and quality, it is a wonder that the stones of the building did not cry out against him.

But, continued the Governor:

> It is probably true that the burdens of an exhorbitant protective tariff fall more heavily upon Iowa than upon most of her sister States.

We demand a bill of particulars. Iowa is an agricultural State. The Iowa farmer, though still needing certain measures of relief, ships his produce at a less cost per ton per mile than the farmer of free-trade Britain. His plows, reapers, mowers, wagons, cost him less than the English farmer pays for such articles. The Iowa farmer drinks untaxed coffee and tea, the British farmer pays tax on every pound of tea or coffee used in his house. The Iowa farmer pays less by one-half for the watch in his pocket than the British farmer pays, and has a better watch. He buys his shoes more cheaply than the English farmer. He buys his woolen clothing quite as cheaply. Free-trader Shoenoff admits that American made shirting is cheaper, quality considered, than English made. How does the tariff fall more heavily upon Iowa than upon her sister States?"

But the tariff has not yet done half the good for Iowa which it is destined to do. The farmer needs new industries. The wheat areas of Eastern India increase so fast, and labor is so cheap there, as to render the Liverpool market of less value with each succeeding year. The growth of home manufactures must provide the American farmer with an increasing home market for his grain and meat, and a protective tariff must protect the meat of Canada and the grain of Manitoba or India from invading it. Besides which the Iowa farmer must have the beet-root and flax industries opened to him. Every considerable town should have its sugar refinery and its flax mill. Beet roots pay the farmer from $31 to $39 profit per acre in California, and Iowa should have like benefits. If will have if Governor Boies and his friends do not succeed in crushing out those two infant industries in the vigorous growth of which Iowa specially is interested.

LIFE INSURANCE

Treats every productive life as capital, as saving is money saved, and to keep that life safe and secure who is dependent upon the continuance and productiveness of that life. The life of the husband and father produces for his family home, food, clothes, education, and various means of enjoyment, his investments and profits. The cessation of these adds from day to day to the money value of his life to them. Sum up the cost of these for all the possible future productive life and you have the money value at interest of capital to represent to them. To illustrate: A healthy, vigorous man may have his earnings productive to him to the age of 70. This leaves, at age 35, thirty-five years of productive life. But the present worth of such $1,00 to be received annually for thirty-five years, assuming interest to be worth 4 per cent., is $16,374 20. Multiply this by the sum for which each of Colburn's original cards obtains his sum which, at the rate named, would be the present interest of his future earnings. This sum being cash value of his life to his family, this is their rightful property in his life, which they may at any moment lose wholly and forever; this sum is made a ready marketable interest to make them wholly responsible for the loss of his life.

This is why Insurance does so provide, and making clear. The money is so safe, not by the helpless sum by, but on the working, producing principle; and thus every family may be sure to secure to what which is best worth to it. The risk of loss has been assumed by the assurance, and the cash value of the average lifetime of the husband and father is secured to them beyond contingency. This is the office and merit of LIFE INSURANCE.

Scaly Skin Diseases

Positively 5 years, covering face, head and entire body with white scales, like dandruff, very itchy, and bleeding. Hair all gone. Spent hundreds of dollars. Pronounced incurable. Cured by Cuticura Remedies.

Cured by Cuticura

My disease (psoriasis) first broke out on my left cheek, spreading across my nose, and almost covering my face. It was like my eyes, and the physician was afraid I would lose my eyesight altogether. It spread all over my head, and my hair all came out. Small spots on my body followed and then broke out on my arms and shoulders, until my arms were just one sore. It covered my entire body, my face being red and shocking being the worst. The white scales fell constantly from my head, shoulders and arms; the skin would stick on, and be red as a very itchy, and would crack and bleed if it scratched. After spending many hundreds of dollars, I was pronounced incurable. Heard of the Cuticura Remedies, and after using two bottles Cuticura Resolvent, I could see a change, and after I had taken four bottles, I was almost cured. Used the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Resolvent one box of Cuticura, and the color of Cuticura Soap I was cured of the dread, and disease which I had suffered for five years. I thought the disease would leave a very deep scar, but the Cuticura Remedies cured it without a trace. I cannot express my gratitude for what I suffered before using the Cuticura Remedies. They saved my life, and I feel it my duty to do so. Mrs. Reed is known by nearly all in Iowa. Any one wishing to write her can do so. My reply is prompt as soon as ever, and so is my eyesight. I know of others who have received great benefit from their use.

"Which way now, Billings?" called one of the cavalry officers in the group.

"Over to Mr. Hayne's quarters," he shouted back, never stopping at all.

A silence fell upon the group at mention of the name. They were the ladies from Capt. Rayner's and a few of their immediate friends. All eyes followed the twinkling light as it danced away eastward towards the gloomy cool sheds. Then there was sudden and intense interest. The lamp had come to a stand still, was deposited on the ground, and by its dim ray the adjutant could be seen bending over a dark object that was half sitting, half reclining at the platform of the shed. Then came a shout, "Come here, some of you." And most of the men ran to the spot.

For a moment not one word was spoken in the watching group; then Miss Travers' voice was heard:

"What can it be? Why do they stop there?"

She felt a sudden hand upon her wrist, and her sister's lips at her ear:

"Come away, Nellie. I want to go home. Come!"

"But, Kate, I must see what it means."

"No; come! It's—it's only some other drunken man, probably. Come!" And she strove to lead her.

But the other ladies were curious too, and all, insensible, were edging over to the east as though eager to get in sight of the group. The recumbent object had been raised, and was seen to be the dark figure of a man whom the others began slowly to lead away. One of the group came running back to them; it was Mr. Foster.

"Come, ladies; I will escort you home, as the others are busy."

"What is the matter, Mr. Foster?" was asked by half-a-dozen voices.

"It was Mr. Hayne—badly burned, I fear. He was trying to get home after having saved poor Clancy.

"You don't say so! Oh, isn't there something we can do? Can't we go that way and be of some help?" was the eager petition of more than one of the ladies.

"Not now. They will have the doctor in a minute. He has not inhaled flame; it is all external; but he was partly blinded and could not find his way. He called to Billings where he heard him coming. I will get you all home and then go back to him. Come!" And, offering his arm to Mrs. Rayner, who was foremost in the direction he wanted to go—the pathway across the parade—Mr. Foster led them on. Of course, there was super talk and voluble sympathy, but Mrs. Rayner spoke not a word. The others crowded around him with questions, and her silence passed unnoted except by one.

The moment they were inside the door and alone Miss Travers turned to her sister: "Katie, what was this man's crime?"

CHAPTER VI.

"I mean the injuries at the fire."

An unusual state of affairs existed in the big hospital for several days. Mrs. Clancy had refused to leave the bedside of her beloved Mike, and was permitted to remain. For a woman who was notorious as a virago and bully, who had beaten Nellie Kain from her babyhood and abused and humiliated her husband until, between her and drink, he was but the wreck of a stalwart manhood Mrs. Clancy had developed a degree of devotion that was utterly unexpected. In all the dozen years of their married relations no such trait could be recalled; and yet there had been many an occasion within the past few years when Clancy's condition demanded gentle nursing and close attention—and never would have got it but for faithful little Kate. The child idolized the broken-down man, and towed him with a tenderness that his weakness seemed but to augment a thousand-fold, while it but served to intensify her mother. In former years, when he was Sergt. Clancy and a fine soldier, many was the time he had interceded to save her from an "undeserved" thrashing; many a time had he seized her in his strong arms and confronted the furious woman with stern reproof. Between him and the child there had been the tenderest love, for she was all that was left to him of four. In the old days Mrs. Clancy had been the belle of the soldiers' balls, a fine looking woman, with indomitable powers as a dancer and conversationalist and an envied reputation for outshining all her rivals in dress and adornment.

"She would ruin Clancy, that she would," was the unanimous opinion of the soldiers' wives; but it seemed to minister to her extravagance with unfailing good nature for two or three years. He had been prudent, careful of his money, was a war soldier with big arrears of bounty and, tradition had it, a consummate skill in poker. He was the moneyed man among the sergeants when the dashing relict of a brother non-commissioned officer set her widow's cap for him and won. It did not take many years for her to wheedle most of his money away, but there was no cessation to the demand, no apparent limit to the supply. Both were growing older, and now it became evident that Mrs. Clancy was the elder of the two, that the artificiality of her charms could not stand the test of frontier life. No longer sought as the belle of the soldiers' ball rooms, she aspired to leadership among their wives and families, and was accorded that preeminence rather than the fierce battle which was sure to follow any revolt. She became avaricious—some said miserly—and Clancy miserable. Then began the downward course. He took to drink more after his return from a long, hard summer's campaign with the Indians. He lost his sergeant's stripes and went into the ranks.

There came a time when the new colonel forbade his re-enlistment in the cavalry regiment in which he had served so many a long year. He had been a brave and devoted soldier. He had a good friend in the infantry, he said, who wouldn't go back on a poor fellow who took a drop too much at times, and, to the surprise of many soldiers—officers and men—he was brought to the recruiting office one day, sober, soldierly, and brimly dressed; and Capt. Rayner informed his desire to enlist him against his company, and it was done. Mrs. Clancy was amongst the guests at the ceremony of a luncheon, as was also Mrs. Hayne, the quartermaster's sleeper which turned him from guard duty on the guard house. The infantry—officers and men—seemed to feel for the poor, broken-down old fellow, and to lay much of his woe to the door of his wife. There was scarcity for his faults and sympathy for his sorrows, but at last it had come to this. He was lying, sorely injured, in the hospital, and there was those who felt was apparently delirious.

At such times, said Mrs. Clancy, she alone could manage him; and she urged that no other nurse could do more than excite or irritate him. To the unspeakable grief of little Kate she, too, was driven from the sufferer's bedside and forbidden to come into the room except when her mother gave permission. Clancy had originally been carried into the general ward, with the other patients, but the hospital steward two days afterwards told the surgeon that the patient moaned and cried so at night that the other sick men could not sleep, and offered to give up a little room in his own part of the building. The burly doctor looked surprised at this concession on the part of the steward, who was a man to whom of every perquisite and emolument made much complaint about the crowded condition of the hospital wards, and small wonder was there in the case of soldiers laid come in. At the same time the doctor smiled to himself at the steward's offer. Clancy was moved to this little room adjoining the steward's quarters forthwith, and Mrs. Clancy was satisfied.

Another thing had happened to excite remark and a good deal of it. Nothing shook of eternal damnation was Mrs. Clancy's frantic sentence on the head of her unlucky spouse at the night of the fire, when she was the central figure of the picture, and when hundreds of witnesses to her words were grouped around. Correspondingly has she called down the blessings of the Holy Virgin and all the saints upon the man who rescued and returned to her that precious packet of money. Everybody heard her, and it was out of the question for her to retract. Nevertheless, from within an hour after Clancy's admission to the hosp tal not another word of the kind escaped her lips. She was all patience and pity with the injured man, and she shunned all allusion to his preserver and her benefactor. The surgeon had been called away, after doing all in his power to make Clancy comfortable—he was need elsewhere—and only two or three soldiers and a hospital nurse still remained by his bedside, when Mrs. Clancy and little Kate were drying their tears and receiving consolation from the steward's wife. The doctor had mentioned a name as he went away, and it was then that Clancy was striving to ask a question. Sergt. Nolan bent down:

"Be quiet, Clancy, me boy; you must be quiet, or you'll move the bandages."

"Who did he say was burned? Who was he going to see?" gasped the sufferer.

"The new lieutenant, Clancy—him that rattled you out. He's a good one, and it's Mrs. Clancy that'll tell ye the same."

"Tell him what" said she, turning about in sudden interest.

"About the lieutenant's pulling him out of the fire and saving your money."

"Insured yez! The blessing of all the saints be upon his beautiful head, and"—

"But who was it? What was his name, I say?" vehemently interrupted Clancy, half rising himself upon his elbow, and groaning with the effort. "What was his name? I didn't see him."

"Lieut. Hayne, man."

"Oh, my God!" gasped Clancy, and fell back as though struck a sad lamb low. She sprang to his side. "It's false! he is D—n't answer his questions, sergeant! He's beside himself! Oh, will ye never stop talking to him and have him in peace? Go away, all of ye's—go away, I say, or ye'll dirtive him crazy wid yez— Be quiet, Mike! don't ye spake again." And she laid a broad, red hand upon his face. He only groaned again and threw his one unbandaged arm across his darkened eyes, as though to hide from sight of all.

INTERESTED PEOPLE.

Advertising a patent medicine is the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam for Coughs and Colds, does, is indeed wonderful. He, unlike all druggists to give those who call for it a sample bottle, free, that they may try it before purchasing. The Large Bottles are fifty cents and $1.00. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption. MWF&w

The handsomest lady in Bangor, remarked to a friend the other day that she knew Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs was a superior remedy, as it stopped her cough instantly when other cough remedies had no effect whatever. LUCK.

Is a word which should have no place in any vocabulary. A man must have ability to succeed, and it is based on merit. There is no luck about Hop Bitters. It was sure to succeed from the first, because it was good, and did all that was claimed for it. MWF&w 3eod
